SECTION A

Answer all the questions in this section.

1. THE US FISCAL CLIFF

Figure 1

5 The first major challenge of President Obama’s second term in office as US President was to prevent the American economy falling over the so called ‘fiscal cliff’. On December 31st 2012 a number of temporary tax cuts were due to end and at the same time a number of government spending cuts were due to be introduced. These totalled over $600bn and could have pushed both the US and maybe the global economy into another recession.

10 A new budget deal urgently needed to be agreed between President Obama and Congress. The problem was that President Obama was from one political party (the Democrats) whereas Congress was dominated by another political party (the Republicans). Without agreement between the two political parties, the tax increases and cuts in government spending would happen automatically.

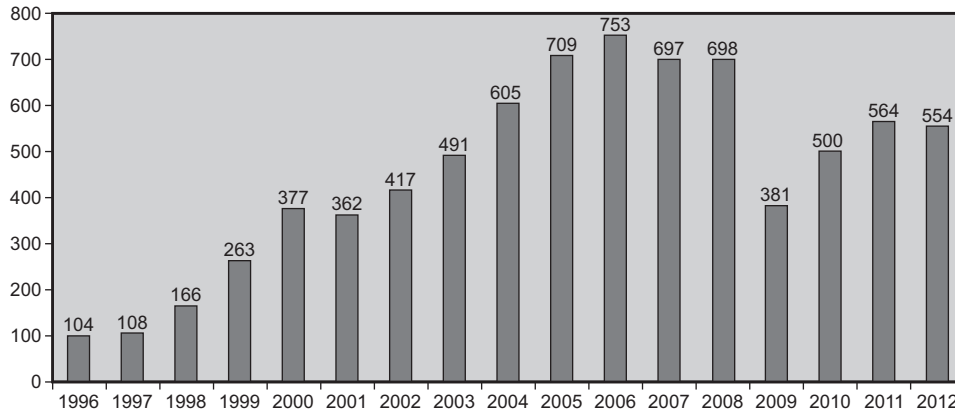

15 At the last minute, a deal was struck. Income tax rates were to rise by 4.6% for those earning over $400,000 per year. Defence spending cuts of $110bn due to begin on January 1st 2013 were postponed for two months, although many politicians argued that the US government should be spending less on defence and more on both improving America’s crumbling infrastructure and boosting spending on education and training.

20 Despite economic growth of 2.2% in 2012, unemployment is still 7.7% of the labour force, up from only 4.4% back in May 2007. This is nevertheless down from a recent high of 9.9% at the end of 2009. Consequently, the Federal Reserve (the US central bank) has announced that interest rates will remain at 0.25% until unemployment falls to 6.5% or lower. Another problem facing the US is a massive trade deficit, standing at over $550bn in 2012.
