Cinema – the big picture

A recent report from the UK Film Council has highlighted the continued growth in the number of multiplex cinemas. Multiplex cinemas are defined as purpose-built cinema complexes with five or more screens. In 2010 39% of all cinema sites were multiplex cinemas and their dominance was even greater when considering the number of screens, as shown in Fig. 1.

	1999	2010
Multiplex cinema screens	1624	2767
Other cinema screens	1134	904
Total number of cinema screens	2758	3671

Fig. 1 – Number of UK cinema screens by type of cinema provider

One possible reason for the trend towards the multiplex cinema has been the existence of internal economies of scale in the industry. Purchasing economies, such as bulk buying, provide cost advantages to the large multiplex providers such as Odeon, Cineworld and Vue. Total labour costs tend not to be as important as in other industries with cinemas employing small numbers of relatively low paid workers. Their major costs come in the shape of fixed costs, such as rents, rates and the rights to show the latest films. As a result of these advantages the large providers have gained a significant share of a growing market, as shown in Fig. 2.

Cinema competition in Newbury

For many years people in Newbury who wanted to go to the cinema were forced to travel elsewhere if they wanted to see newly released films. The large local cinema had closed and for a period the Corn Exchange was the only place to watch films in Newbury. The Corn Exchange has a single screen with a fixed capacity of only 40 seats and is unable to show the latest new film releases until later than the main multiplex providers. The cinema is only one part of the Corn Exchange's business. It also has space for live performances and exhibitions. 15

The recent opening of a new Vue multiplex cinema in Newbury did not, however, cause problems for the Corn Exchange. The Corn Exchange remains price competitive, operates a popular loyalty card system and shows a variety of mainstream and minority interest films. It also has showings dedicated to specific groups such as 'Silver Screen' for over-60s and 'You Shall Go To the Bawl' for parents and carers with babies under 18 months. 20

The Vue cinema, part of a national group, has the benefit of being a high capacity multiplex cinema showing the latest film releases as soon as possible and has little local competition for the service it provides. On a national scale the main challenge to the market dominance of the major multiplex providers might be the growth in the variety of ways in which films are now viewed, as shown in Fig. 3. 25

Method of viewing films	%
DVD bought	19.8
Live television	19.5
Recorded from television	14.5
Cinema	11.1
Subscription television	10.9
DVD rented	6.2
Others	18.0
